LIVING IN THE COUNTRY

Learn how the Farming and Food Protection Act protects “normal farm practice” in Ontario and how conflicts, nuisances and bylaws are handled.

Rural Ontario is changing. Farms are increasing in size and complexity, and fewer people living in rural areas are farmers.

To ensure the rights of all rural Ontario residents are respected, the Ontario government passed Bill 146, the Farming and Food Production Protection Act, 1998 (FFPPA),

There are two main themes in the FFPPA:

- Farmers are protected from nuisance complaints made by neighbours, provided they are following “normal farm practices.”
- No municipal bylaw applies to restrict a “normal farm practice” carried on as part of an agricultural operation.
